NOTICE

Hello, students of BVCOA,

Council has organized yin-yang day on 12th February 2020.

What is yin-yang? - The yin yang symbol represents the interconnectedness of the world, particularly the natural world. There can be no positive without a negative, no open without closed, no light without shadow.

Dress code- White & Black; symbolizing balance.

"MAD Architects have designed the Harbin Cultural centre located on the Harbin Cultural Island. The grand theatre takes the natural beauty of the north as its premise. In an attempt to reduce such a large volume, the architectural form is a continuation of the natural environment as it becomes part of the landscape. The entire building acts as an undulating snow-covered mountain, following a natural rhythm. It encourages the publicity and mass participation of Harbin's art and culture activities. People can get a different sensory experience from different distances."

1st place - Prerna Patel "Mangroves which considerably will have to be shifted to facilitate the construction of the NMIA, and make the airport operationally safe, or will have the same consequence like that of the former mangroves in the Mithi river? This questionable scenario brings in need for an interpretation centre where we take a step forward to conserve our own ecology. The design therefore will assist to bridge the gap between the people and it's natural context by connecting virtual and verbal information with the mangrove biome for an idiosyncratic interpretation."

C. 3rd place - Harshali Pande "The illustration is a glimpse of thought process involved in designing a cultural centre in Semester 3, which showcases modular architecture as an essential design element explored. Sabarmati Ashram designed by Charles Correa had a immense influence on me, the beautiful play of open and semi open spaces using a single roof module inspired me to explore the concept of modular architecture. Modularity is an important feature in architecture as it portrays the language of repetitiveness and is cost effective. Module design is incremental and can be expanded or modified whenever necessary."
